“Examination of the Health Effects of Asbestos and Methods of Mitigating Such Impacts”

Linda Reinstein

Asbestos Disease Awareness Organization
June 12, 2007

I would like to thank Chairman Boxer, Ranking Member Inhofe and the entire EPW committee for the honor and opportunity to testify today.

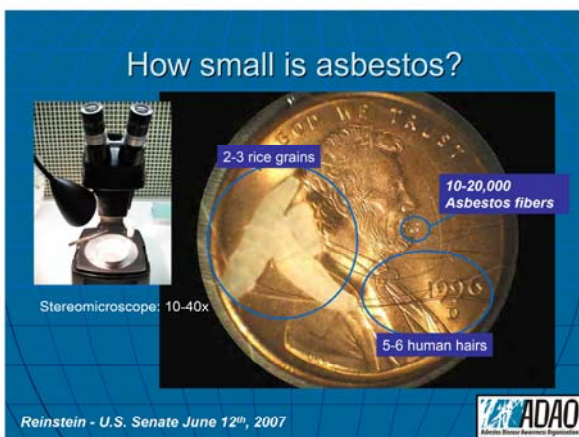

My name is Linda Reinstein, Executive Director and Co-founder of the Asbestos Disease Awareness Organization (ADAO) and now a mesothelioma widow. My husband, Alan Reinstein, lost his three year battle with mesothelioma, a deadly asbestos cancer in May 2006. I am neither a lobbyist nor an attorney, only a volunteer.

Today, I somberly represent the victims and their families who have suffered the traumatic effects of asbestos diseases. Hundreds of thousands of asbestos victims around the world paid the ultimate price for asbestos exposure: their lives. These diseases were all preventable.

Before I share the faces, it is important to understand the facts. We can not alter history or bring back the dead, but we can learn from the past to save lives and money.

Most Americans trust that their air, soil and water are safe from toxic contaminants – but as victims, we know the truth. For a century, asbestos exposure had been linked to incurable diseases, yet we continue to face an enormous man-made public health crisis. Just walk the streets of Libby or New York City or talk to the U.S. Capitol Tunnel Workers – they also know all too well about the irreversible effects of asbestos poisoning. The stress and trauma is life altering for those Americans with known asbestos exposure waiting for time to reveal their medical fate. The International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) declared asbestos as a human carcinogen thirty years ago. The Environmental Protection Agency, (EPA) World Health Organization (WHO) and the International Labor Organization (ILO) agree - there is no safe level of asbestos exposure. The simple truth is - asbestos kills.

human hair. Once known as the “The Magic Mineral”, these virtually indestructible asbestos fibers can be 700 times smaller than human hair and remain suspended in air from seconds to days.

Although asbestos safety measures have been in place since the 1970s, The Center for Disease Control (CDC) reported that deaths from asbestosis, a debilitating lung disease, increased from 77 deaths in 1968 to 1,493 deaths in 2000. These and other asbestos-related diseases are not going away, only the victims who die.

The World Health Organization estimates 125 million workers are exposed to asbestos and 90,000 workers die annually. There is no global data estimating deaths from non-occupational or environmental exposure.

Asbestos is an equal opportunity killer and the dust does not discriminate. Inhaling or swallowing asbestos fibers can cause malignant and nonmalignant diseases.

Asbestos diseases are difficult to diagnose and treat. Evolution of disease, from exposure, screening, surveillance, detection, treatment and death can take 10 - 50 years. Children are even more susceptible to carcinogens and have a shorter latency period.

It is important to focus on all asbestos-caused diseases, not just mesothelioma. The Sarnia seven year study sited: 65% of the victims suffered from asbestos-caused cancers and the remaining 35% suffered from asbestosis. Lung cancer and mesothelioma accounted for 25% and 11% respectively of asbestos diseases.

Asbestosis is the scarring of lung tissue resulting only from the inhalation of asbestos fibers which reduces oxygen transfer to the blood as well as the removal of carbon dioxide. Asbestosis is a painful, progressive and incurable lung disease with no effective treatment.

Victims suffering from pulmonary diseases and cancer feel like they are breathing through a pinched straw, for every breath, every minute, every day. When the victims' oxygen levels become critically low, they are tethered to supplemental oxygen to prolong life. Lack of oxygen causes death by respiratory failure and/or cardiac arrest.

To prolong a victim's life, many cancer patients opt for radical treatments such as having their entire diseased lung and diaphragm surgically removed. We call this, death by 1,000 cuts. Victims living with these painful, aggressive and hopelessly incurable diseases sometimes commit suicide or ask spouses to commit mercy killings.

Mesothelioma patients' medical expenses can exceed $1 million – until death.

Medical Expenses Include:

- Tri-modal Cancer Treatment
 - Surgery
 - Radiation
 - Chemotherapy
- Medication & Oxygen
- Home Health/Hospice
- Psychiatry
- Interstate Travel to Medical Centers

The physical, financial and physiological devastation are immeasurable to the victims and their families. After the patient dies, financial and psychological problems continue to plague the family. For each life lost, a shattered family is left behind.

Psychological issues are tormenting– as victims hold hands with death.

- Constantly facing death is debilitating for both the patient and family.
- Constantly facing death is debilitating for both the patient and family.
- Caregivers face both mental and physical exhaustion – Alan needed 24 hour care for 12 months.
- Depression is a common factor.

Physical pain and treatments are brutal ; the prognosis is grim

- Screening, surveillance, and detection are exhausting and remain a constant reminder of exposure and possible terminal diseases.
- Late stage diagnosis is common, as many victims are asymptomatic.
- Victim has baffling and radical treatment options to navigate.
- Dangerous surgeries and toxic medicine – if the diseases don't end your life, the treatments may.

Financial issues devour assets and threaten financial stability

- Expensive medical treatments. One month of Alan's prescriptions, oxygen and chemotherapy averaged $104,000.
- Lost jobs or reduced income results when victims are too ill to work.
- Health benefits are also terminated as a result of losing a job.

Constant fear and extreme isolation magnifies these three factors.

In 1990, the average patient was a male, age 70. Our data shows the new patient profile to be a 51 year old woman. Younger victims are dying from diseases. Recently, a 16 year-old girl was diagnosed with mesothelioma. Patients diagnosed with asbestos-caused diseases are completely innocent. They are firefighters and veterans, construction workers and engineers. They are the women who became exposed washing their husbands' work clothes. They are children whose loving hug turned deadly.

Surveillance in the US continues to under report asbestos-related disease. Without disease registries, effective outreach and well implemented surveillance programs; we can not accurately forecast the magnitude of disease.

Deadly Contamination Continues Today

Asbestos was widely used in the construction and attic insulation in millions of homes in the U.S. and Canada built before 1975. More than 30 million homes, schools and office building are still contaminated with deadly asbestos.

In 2002, the collapse of the World Trade Center towers led to the release of hundreds of tons of asbestos from the towers. An estimated 20,000 responders, workers, volunteers and residents suffer from respiratory diseases. The annual direct treatment costs are $140 million dollars. We can only extrapolate the cost of human tragedy and treatment expenses from the Hurricane Katrina disaster one of whose consequences is poorly controlled asbestos exposure in the buildings being repaired and demolished. The World Health Organization has started an asbestos action program to help countries all over the world develop national plans, based on the conclusion that “the most efficient way to eliminate asbestos-related diseases is to stop using all types of asbestos.”

Asbestos continues to be mined and exported from Canada. The United States and Canada remain the only two industrialized nations that have not yet banned the use of asbestos in common products while more than 40 countries have banned asbestos. Consumers are at risk with imported products contaminated with asbestos such as brakes and asbestos-cement building panels. The asbestos ban will only be as effective as the laws that are enforced. Presently, minimal fines and lack of enforcement make our existing laws weak and deadly asbestos exposure continues.

What is a human life worth?

Certainly banning asbestos and investing in safe alternatives. Without an asbestos ban, deaths and litigation will continue. To profit over people is unconscionable. It is time to eliminate asbestos exposure, while simultaneously investing in research for a cure and improved treatments. We applaud Senator Patty Murray for the Ban Asbestos in America Act, as an immediate worldwide ban on the production and use of asbestos is long overdue, fully justified and absolutely necessary.

Support for this critical issue comes from some of the most well respected members of the scientific and medical community and outpouring from victims from around the world. I have included a list of these endorsers in my written testimony.

Thank you.
